The Goat Cure

The Goat Cure (Kozy léčí)

The story of renewed zest for life, and of the fact that illness does not have to mean the end, but rather the chance to do something with your life. The main heroine, Jana, moves to the countryside with her family, where she buys an interesting cottage at the suggestion of her husband. The lifestyle change is meant to primarily help Jana in her struggle with her illness. Jana and her husband undergo a period that involves several complicated moments concerning relationship, existential and other problems. The family has two children, the first of which is sixteen-year-old Johana, who is not particularly thrilled with her parents' decision to move to the countryside, which she lets everyone around her know. The other child is eight-year-old Marek, who settles down quite quickly in the new environment. Of course, the mother's illness, or more so the fact the children learn about it much later than anyone else, is reflected in the relationship between the parents and children.
